Loess Hills

The Loess Hills are a globally significant geological landform located along the eastern edge of the Missouri River floodplain. They were formed when westerly winds lifted silt from Missouri

River floodplain which had been deposited by glacial floods. The Loess Hills are characterized by rugged terrain and extremely deep deposits of loess (60-200 feet deep). The unique nature of the Loess Hills landform enables it to support rare plants, animals, and biological communities.

Observe

The Loess Hills Lodge at Hitchcock features a new 45' adjoining observation tower. Ascend the tower to get a unique view of the surrounding Loess Hills flora and fauna.

Bring your binoculars to catch a glimpse of the local wildlife. Common Loess Hills species include deer, fox, and turkey as well as numerous raptors and songbirds. Rare animals such as the Ornate Box Turtle, Prairie Racerunner, and Regal Fritillary also find refuge on the preserve.

Discover

Encounter a different side of nature. Hitchcock offers a variety of options for visitors wishing to extend their stay. Spend an evening in one of our camping cabins, or in the modern campground featuring spacious RV sites. For the more adventurous, Hitchcock also has a large tent camping area and several scenic backpack campsites that are located deep within the preserve.

Visit the Loess Hills playground. Children will love the giant spider web, hidden cave, and zip line.

Reflect

Hitchcock is the perfect place to spend a quiet, relaxing afternoon emerged in the natural world. Hikers of all abilities are encouraged to explore over 10 miles of hiking trails that wind through Loess Hills woodlands, oak savannas and prairie remnants, including an equal access boardwalk trail. Geocaching is also popular at Hitchcock. Bring your GPS unit and search for hidden caches in the hills.

After your hike, relax at one of our scenic overlooks or picnic areas.

Share

You are invited to share your enthusiasm for nature throughout the year. Listen to the sound of songbirds in the spring and visit our nationally recognized HawkWatch in the fall. Hitchcock was named the first Important Birding Area (IBA) in Iowa and is also identified as 1 of 4 hawkwatching sites in the world with 500+ migrating bald eagles.

Annually, the Hitchcock HawkWatch volunteers count migrating raptors from early September to late December. Visit us and see some for yourself!

Experience

Throughout the year, special public programs are presented at Hitchcock that are designed to engage nature lovers of all ages. Visit during one of our popular annual events.

- 🌿 Owl Prowl (Feb.)
